WHY BARRY

BARRY YOUVE BEEN OWNER TO THE BEEN OWNER THE SOME THIN THE RES NO SELF IN A SELF IN A

PROBLEM

Dear Miss Norton:

I am fourteen, and in grammar school. A boy in my class has asked me to go out with him three times already, but I have always said no, because my mother thinks I'm too young to go with boys. But I like him a lot, and I'm afraid that if I keep saying no he'll stop asking me. But I don't want bo disobey my mother. What can I don't want bo disobey my mother. What can I don't

Jackie G. Cincinnati, Ohio

That's a problem that besets many girls just about your age, Jackie. Some of them solve it by asking their mothers to let them invite the boys to their homes, where the boys can meet the girls parents and become acquainted with them. In this way a girl can remain friendly with a boy until her parents decide it is proper for the young couple to go out together. Try it, Jackie.

Dear Mildred Norton:

I am very interested in a boy in my class, third year in high school. But he insists on giving me things. He has given me several expensive presents, and he is quite hurt if I try to refuse them. He says he has plenty of money, and that it makes him happy to give me nice things. Now he wants to give me an expensive watch that I was foolish enough to admire. My mother won't let me take It, and I agree with her, but I don't want to hurt him. How can I make him, see why?

Claire Arnow Bayside, N. Y.

Simple explanations are the best, Claire. Just tell him that accepting expensive gifts is not considered in good taste. Ask him j he wants your friends to start whispering that you are a gold-digger, or that the only way he can interest you is by buying your love. He ought to understand after that, no matter how generous and impulsive he is.

Dear Miss Norton:

In less than a month my boyfriend is going overseas in the Army. We intend to get married someday, so I want us to get engaged now. I'm afraid that if we don't he may forget me while he's away. How can I make him see it my way? Carol Hills

New York, N. Y.

I'm afraid you can't make him see it your way, Carol, and perhaps it's just as well. Your approach to the matter is childish. If your love and his are real, then an engagement is unnecessary. If it is not-well, very lew men are held by an engagement if they choose to run away!

Dear Mildred Norton:

After being married for over a year, something terrible happened to me. Suddenly and for no reason that I can understand, I became terribly jealous. I imagined that my husband was interested in other women, though at the same time I can now say that I'm sure he wasn't. Anyway. I made life miserable for him, and recently he left my, saying he would return if I could get over my jealousy. I know I was wrong, but how can I prove it to him?

B. R. D. Louisville, Kv.

It seems to me that you are really cured of your unfortunate spell of jealousy. You seem to under-stand that it was wrong, and based on untruth, and that is the most important step in getting rid of such jedlings. Why not call your husband, ask him to take you out on a few dates, and in that way prove yourself to him.

Dear Miss Norton:

I have been engaged to a boy for several moths. Suddenly I found out that he is marriaalthough separated from his wife. He never told me about it in all this time. He says he will divorce her and marry me, but somehow I don't feel I can trust him after he deceived me for so long. Do you think it's possible that he can really be sincere about me?

Bernice Pickett Dallas, Texas

Possible, Bernice—but not probable! He didn't think enough of you to tell you the truth, even when asking you to share his life with him. Why should he tell the truth at other times? I believe your instinctive distrust of him is well-jounded.

I LIED FOR LOVE

Susan didn't really mean to lie. But she needed a job, and desperately, and so it just came out. "Oh, certainly, Mr. Aldrich, I'm married." She knew she was blushing. She never had been able to lie convincingly. But perhaps he'd think it was just a natural shyness.

"Well, you certainly come well recommended, and you have all the qualifications," said Richard Aldrich. His blue eyes twinkled, and his handsome mouth smiled, partly in admiration of Susan's fresh young beauty, and partly in perplexity. "Of course, when I advertised for a housekeeper, I expected someone—well, you know, older! I'm a bachelor, you see, and the two of us living alone here—but you are a married woman?"

"Oh, yes," said Susan, compounding the lie.
"For five years now."

Alright, it was terrible, but she did need the job. And how was she supposed to have known? Richard J. Aldrich 3rd—she had pictured a fussy old man living in a dusty old Victorian mansion, not a handsome man of thirty with the build of an athlete and the face of a movie star, living in an ultra-modern thing of glass brick and sandstone, with a swimming pool in the back!

"How is it that—where is your husband, Mrs. Iones?"

Susan thought fast. She couldn't say she was divorced. That would be as had as being unmarried. Now where could a man—? Her eye fell on an advertisement in a magazine lying on the table, and she blurted out, "Why, he's a salesman of American Products. He only gets home once in a month."

"I see," said Mr. Aldrich quietly. "Well, then, the job is yours. Mrs. Pillson, the housekeeper who's leaving, will acquaint you with your duties."

The next few weeks passed in a haze of happiness for Susan. The house was a dream, and she soon came to love it as her own. She felt as if she had lived in it all her life—and wished that she had.

As for the owner of the house—well, Susan tried not to think about that, but it was impossible. She saw him at breakfast and dinner, at lunch on weekends, and he insisted that she spend many an evening with him, watching television, playing cards or just talking. They came to know a great deal about each other. Susan was free to swim in the pool, where she was often joined by Mr. Aldrich, and she had complete charge of the house. And when her employer had guests. Susan was treated as one of the family, dining with them and joining in their activities.

But it was too good to last. Susan had known that the first time she looked at Mr. Richard Aldrich. After all, a girl can't stay in the same house with a man and preserve her dignity, to say nothing of her self control, when every time she looks at the man her cheeks grow warm and her heart turns cartwheels!

So at last, after a particularly sleepless night, sleepless because of the very thought of Mr. Aldrich close by, Susan made her decision. "Alright, I admit it! I'm in love with him. And because I'm in love with him, I can't stay in this house another minute, or something might—no, I'll just have to leave!"

She marched into the living room, planted herself before the master of the house, and managed to say, "I'm sorry, but I must leave. I—I have personal reasons!"

"You have?" Suddenly he reached out, pulled her to him. "But I have personal reasons for keeping you here!" And then he kissed her!

Susan struggled free, "Please! After all, I told you I was married—!"

"So you did," said Richard J. Aldrich 3rd,
"But darling. I happen to be vice-president in charge of sales of American Products! You're a lousy liar, sweetheart, but beautiful! Now—would it be alright if I kiss a girl who's only soins to be married—to me?!"
